Congressman Gaines Dwells Upon
Hawaii "Transition Period" in Speech Before Congress.

Congressman John W. Gaines of Tennessee during a speech in the House of Representatives January 23 made the following reference to Hawaii:

But conditions are not much better in the Territory of Hawaii. On returning from the Philippines I stopped there and found that slavery existed there, and that three Republican judges, appointed by President McKinley, had held that the fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, and thirteenth amendments to the Constitution did not apply to Hawaii; that a conviction on indictment found without a grand jury was valid; or that a conviction by a majority of a jury of twelve was valid; or that a conviction by a majority of the thirteenth amendment did not apply to that Territory or reach a system of slavery under what is known as the masters and servants act, which "makes imprisonment for life," as the court said, "a possible punishment for its violation."

The court further held that the eighth amendment to the Constitution did not apply, which requires that—Excessive days shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel or unusual punishments inflicted.

The act under which the defendant was convicted reads as follows: If any person willfully absent himself from such service without the leave of his master, any district magistrate of the Republic, upon complaint made under oath by the master, or by any one on his behalf, may issue a warrant to apprehend such person and bring him before the said magistrate; and if the complaint shall be maintained the magistrate shall order such offender to be restored to his master, and he shall be required to serve the remainder of the time for which he originally contracted.

If any person shall refuse to serve according to the provisions of the last section or the terms of his contract, his master may apply to any district magistrate where he may reside, who shall be authorized, by warrant or otherwise, to send for the person so refusing, and if such refusal be persisted in to commit such person to prison, there to remain at hard labor until he will consent to serve according to law. And in case such person so bound as aforesaid shall have returned to the service of such master in obedience to such order of such magistrate, and shall again willfully absent himself from such service without the leave of his master, such district magistrate may fine such offender for the first offense not exceeding $5, and for the second offense not exceeding $10; and in default of payment thereof such offender shall be imprisoned at hard labor until such fine is paid; and for every subsequent offense thereafter the offender shall be imprisoned at hard labor not exceeding three months, and at the expiration of any such imprisonment such magistrate shall order such offender to be restored to his master to serve for the remainder of his original term of service.

Laborers are enslaved and can be imprisoned under this law, and one was in this sugar company's case. I rejoice to state that about a year ago there was placed on the same bench a Mr. Justice Galbraith, from the good State of Indiana, who utterly repudiates, in the dissenting opinions that he writes, these Republican adjudications and holds, as he should, that the Constitution follows the flag. (Applause.)

I know of no cases but these which I have cited—the one in Hawaii and the other in Ohio—where an American judge or official, civil or military, has ever held that the thirteenth amendment did not prohibit slavery within the limits of American domain. It applied and destroyed the system of peonage in the Territory of New Mexico; it was applied in Alaska, and an Indian slave was given his freedom in an opinion found in Thirty-first Federal Reporter, written as I remember, by Justice Dawson, and the question has never been presented to the Supreme Court of the United States, so far as I recall, that that court did not hold that the thirteenth amendment applied throughout the territory of the United States, and that the jury rights that were denied in this case in Hawaii were rights which the people in each and all of our Territories were entitled to have as rights guaranteed to them, under and by virtue of the Constitution.

I am glad to state that in a recent case, in writ of habeas corpus proceedings, Mr. Justice Ester, of the Federal bench, has reversed the opinion of the Supreme Court in the Hawaii case which I have been discussing, and holds that the opinion of Mr. Justice Galbraith, a Democrat, is correct. An appeal has been presented in the Federal case, and it stands now for judgment before the Supreme Court of the United States. But no right of appeal is given in the cases in the Philippine Islands to the Supreme Court of the United States.

A STORY OF CONAN DOYLE.

All this reminds me of a very pretty little story I heard of Conan Doyle the other day—a story very much to his honor. He has a literary friend, with whom he occasionally takes a golfing expedition. The two set out for Cromer, where there are wonderful links, as everybody knows, and their wrath was incredible when, arriving on Saturday night, they found there was no golf to be had on Sunday. So they walked and talked. Among other things, Conan Doyle's friend asked the great novelist what he was doing.

"Nothing," was the terse reply. "What are the public tired of you, or have the publishers lost faith in you?"

"Not at all," replied the creator of Sherlock Holmes; "they are clamoring for copy on all sides; but really I want to give my brain a rest, and anyhow I haven't a plot in my head just now."

And the junior writer began to tell a plot that had formed itself in his mind and that he contemplated turning into a story. Conan Doyle listened attentively; and when his friend had done, asked if he would give him the plot on condition of sharing the profits. The young author, of course, only too gladly assented. And now the younger author is calmly drawing some hundreds of pounds and in the thousands of pounds as the fruits of that little conversation in the Sabbath silence of the golf links at Cromer. Lucky man to have met an author as honest and as generous as Conan Doyle. There are plenty of people who would have annexed the idea and given no return, either in meal or malt.—M. A. P.
